Romania's Arab Students: A Growing Terrorist Problem for the Regime	25
The increased hostility among Arab countries and within Palestinian organizations over PLO and Jordanian peace initiatives has prompted stepped-up political activity and violence among the various Arab student factions in Romania. According to official statistics, in 1982 there were approximately 20,000 Foreign students in Romania, and we believe over half of them were Arabs. Data by nationality are not available, but Jordanian diplomats estimate the	25
umber of Palestinian students alone at 6,000.  The most serious incident to date was the ssassination in Bucharest last December of a ordanian diplomat by a radical Palestinian student.	25 caused a najor political embarrassment for President Ceausescu. We believe the perpetrator was the Abu Nidal terrorist group, formerly known as the Black une organization, which operates out of Syria. Its members have repeatedly attacked Jordanian targets Isewhere and threatened further violence since King Hussein agreed last November to allow PLO leader trafat to chair a meeting of the Palestine National	25
Council in Amman.	25
	Infighting among Arab students escalated again to terrorist violence in late May when two Romanian security officials were killed attempting to defuse a bomb planted in a Syrian student leader's car. The Romanian police apprehended two suspects but have been unwilling to provide information on their identity. A Romanian official did tell a US diplomat that the bomb had a sophisticated, antitamper detonation device so sensitive that the slightest movement set it off. The force of the explosion was so great that metal car parts were catapulted four stories in the air. A second bomb was successfully defused.

"Kid Glove" Security Response

Immediately after the December assassination, the Romanians heightened their security posture in hopes of preventing further trouble ringleader is quietly expelled from Romania.

Romanian President Ceausescu's close ties to PLO Chairman Yasir Arafat could provoke hostile reactions from anti-Arafat students in Romania.

Only on rare occasions—when very alarmed by the volatility of the situation—does the regime resort to force.

Diplomatic Complications

Ceausescu's desire to be an "honest broker" trying to facilitate peace in the Middle East has given him headaches in trying to maintain good relations with all the squabbling parties. To date he has been fairly successful, but he is facing increasing difficulty from all sides. Ceausescu's efforts to promote a negotiated settlement in the Middle East, his open support for PLO Chairman Yasir Arafat, and Romania's ties to Israel could even make the Romanians themselves a target for supporters of the radical Arab states and their client Palestinian groups.

Ceausescu's activities earlier this year no doubt attracted much criticism from radical Arabs in Romania and abroad. In February, he had highly publicized meetings in Bucharest with Arafat, Israeli Prime Minister Peres, and a special envoy of Egyptian President Mubarak, and he also endorsed the PLO-Jordanian accord of 11 February between Arafat and King Hussein.

Qadhafi probably hopes his public

	We think there is also a risk that Ceausescu's role in Middle Eastern politics will sooner or later lead radical Arab students, for the first time, to attack Romanian targets. Ceausescu's initiatives to promote a negotiated Middle East settlement or the conviction and sentencing of the assassin of the Jordanian diplomat might be the catalyst. Ceausescu has privately assured the Jordanian Foreign Minister,	displeasure alone will bring about a more favorable Romanian attitude. Beyond possible economic reprisals, Ceausescu no doubt fears that Libyan students in Romania will carry out terrorist violence.
